and thereupon the ancient matrons sworn to that office repair to the place where the corpse lies, and upon their own view and others[5] examination, make a judgment of what disease or casualty the corpse died, which judgment they report to the parish clerk He on every Tuesday night bnngeth to the clerk of the Hall an account of every christening and burial that week , whence on Wednesday the general account is made up, and printed During this year 1592, there have died in London from March to December 25,886 persons, whereof of the plague

«»5°3